Vineyards

Rías Baixas boasts a number of high quality grapes; chief among them is Albariño, occupying more than 90% of the DO's vineyard area. The soils are largely granite, with some chalk and clay. The earth here offers lots of minerals but few nutrients, making it perfect for wine-growing. Old vineyards planted in the Pérgola system, traditional for this area, produce the grapes of Albariño with a high level of acidity given the proximity to the Atlantic ocean and the high level of rain. This wine will continue to develop complexity with bottle age.

Pale gold hue and aromatics of floral blossoms and touch of lemon zest. The wine is bright and fresh on the palate with herbal essences and white fruits, and shows minerality with a hint of overlying sea mist. A well balanced wine with good acidity.
